

Cruise Ports Of Call

Icy Straight Point is all about nature with beautiful scenery, whale watching and hiking trails

Icy Straight Point, Alaska

This is a nature port on Chichagof Island which opened in 2004 and is only open when cruise ships are in. It was developed by the Native Tlingits and celebrates their culture. It is the ideal location for viewing wildlife and sea life. Hoonah, the only town on the island is described as the largest Tlingit Village in the state.

Where Your Ship Docks –

Depending on tides and number of ships, cruise ships either dock or tender (sometimes both). In either case, arrival is near the adventure center which is the starting point for land tours. Going in the other direction, the boardwalk takes you to the old cannery complex which now houses a museum, local shops, restaurants and a display of the original cannery operation. The Fish House is also located in this area and it is the starting point for marine tours.

Transportation – There are very limited car rentals or taxi service. A sightseeing trolley is sometimes operational. If you plan to do more than a walking exploration, it is probably best to book a tour.

Money – The US dollar is used here and credit cards are welcome.

Nearby Trips:

The largest and highest Zipline in North America is located at ISP. It runs 5330 feet and includes a 1300 foot vertical drop.

Hoonah Village is a short ride from where you come ashore. If a trolley is running it will be one of the stops. It is a very small community with only a few shops and restaurants.

The nature trail provides an opportunity to see native plants and
